The rapid pace of urbanisation in the modern era has created a significant imbalance between the city and the countryside. While cities are often viewed as engines of economic growth and hubs of innovation, they are increasingly becoming overcrowded, leading to a decline in the quality of life. This phenomenon is largely driven by the lack of opportunities in rural areas, forcing the youth to migrate in search of better livelihoods. However, a sustainable future for the nation does not lie in the endless expansion of urban borders, but in the holistic development of our villages.

True progress can only be achieved when rural areas are equipped with modern infrastructure, quality education, and accessible healthcare. If we can provide the same digital and physical connectivity in villages that is currently exclusive to cities, we can curb forced migration. Furthermore, empowering rural industries and agriculture through technology will create local employment, reducing the burden on urban resources. The goal should not be to turn every village into a city, but to provide urban-like amenities in a rural setting. Only by bridging this developmental gap can we ensure balanced national growth and prevent our cities from collapsing under the weight of their own population.

3. Write a Letter to the Mayor of Aizawl Municipal Corporation highlighting the rising incidence of burglary in various localities of Aizawl city and urging him to implement concrete measures to address the issue, including some remedial suggestions. Sign as XYZ of ABC locality. (10)
4. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow.

In the contemporary digital era, social media has emerged as a dominant force shaping the lives of young individuals. While it provides unprecedented opportunities for communication, self-expression, and access to information, its pervasive influence has raised serious concerns regarding youth mental health. The constant exposure to curated and idealized representations of life often leads to unhealthy comparisons, fostering feelings of inadequacy, low self-esteem, and anxiety among adolescents.

Moreover, the addictive nature of social media platforms exacerbates these issues. The pursuit of validation through likes, comments, and followers can create a cycle of dependency, where self-worth becomes contingent upon virtual approval. This phenomenon not only distracts young people from real-life interactions but also contributes to social isolation and emotional distress. Studies have shown that excessive screen time is closely associated with sleep disturbances, reduced concentration, and increased levels of stress.

Another critical aspect is the prevalence of cyberbullying, which has become a significant threat in the digital landscape. Unlike traditional forms of bullying, online harassment can be relentless and far-reaching, leaving victims with little respite. The anonymity afforded by social media often emboldens perpetrators, intensifying the psychological impact on victims and, in severe cases, leading to depression and suicidal tendencies.

However, it is important to acknowledge that social media is not inherently detrimental. When used responsibly, it can serve as a platform for awareness, support, and community building.

Mental health campaigns, peer support groups, and access to professional resources have become more accessible through digital channels.

In conclusion, while social media offers numerous benefits, its adverse effects on youth mental health cannot be overlooked. A balanced approach involving digital literacy, parental guidance, and self-regulation is essential to mitigate its negative consequences and promote overall well-being.
